

Different Cultures, Different Art: What do the United States and Turkmenistan have in Common?

Every culture has its own values and ways of expressing art and creativity. When it comes to culture, Turkmenistan, a landlocked country in Central Asia, is a country almost opposite to the United States. One focuses on family relationships, formality, and rules, while the other values individualism, informality, and freedom. Having so many cultural differences, what do we have in common? This poster aims to explore some of our differences while uncovering shared ideas and values. This showcase will introduce contrasting artistic visions in Turkmenistan and the United States, focusing on the art of filmmaking, fashion, and literature. Through vibrant visuals and narratives, we will share the diverse perspectives of these two countries to gain a deeper understanding of the cultural influences on their art and creativity.
